Bastien Sasseville is a professor of didactics at the Université du Québec à Rimouski, Québec, Canada.

His main fields of research are the history of education and the relations between education, technology and society. He is particularly interested the manner in which educational changes are, from an ideological point of view, implemented and how discourses support and justify these changes.

Since 2004, he is a researcher with the Inter-institutional Research Group on Distance Education (Groupe Interinstitutionnel de Recherche en Formation à Distance, GIREFAD).

He has contributed to many research projects with the GIREFAD and is currently heading a research project on the use of cinema in teaching history at a secondary level.

Bastien Sasseville has also been teaching History at various secondary schools and colleges in the Lower St-Lawrence area, near Rimouski for the past twenty years.
