Suzanne is the Director of Technology enhanced instruction and faculty support in the College of Extended Studies.

She has PhD in Education and a Master's Degree in Educational Technology from Claremont Graduate University and San Diego State University.

Her expertise derives from 17 years of experience educating adults, and has two foci.

The first is improving teaching and learning in higher education. Since 2005, she has led successful change initiatives for faculty, administrators and staff at SDSU and the California State University system. Her work has influenced practice and policy, and impacted thousands of students. Additionally, she regularly designs, evaluates and consults on learning technologies. Currently, she leads the development and support of online courses and programs.

Secondly, Suzanne's research investigates how individuals learn to use technology in their everyday lives. Her current focus is on women's experiences in non-workplace settings.

Suzanne has also taught English as a foreign language, and prior to becoming an educator she was a singer-songwriter, performance artist and composer.
