Artur Stępniaak is a student at the Institute of English Philology in The John Paul II Catholic University in Lublin, Poland. His scientific interests are focused on Bilingual Learning and Content Language Integrated Learning.

Currently, he is the headmaster of Bilingual Primary School Smart School in Zamość, where he also holds a post of methodological adviser in the field of teaching English. Artur Stępniaak is a student since 2010. His PhD project is entitled "Implementing bilingual education and content language integrated learning in Polish primary schools." It is conducted under the supervision of and in co-operation with dr hab. Anna Bloch-Rozmej.

During his career in the field of teaching English as a foreign language Artur has worked with all the age groups of learners, from little children aged three to adult students in the Department of English Studies at The Catholic University of Lublin. He has also had the pleasure of observing the process of teaching and learning English from all the possible angles, from being a teacher in both public and private sectors, through working with students at the university, to his present position as the headmaster of a school.
