I am a PhD student at De Montfort University, United Kingdom.

I graduated in Educational Sciences from King Saud University in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia in 1994. Since then I have constantly been working in the field of Education as a secondary school teacher in Saudi Arabia.

I continued my postgraduate studies and achieved MA in Educational Administration from Jordan University in 2005. In 2010 I started my research on an investigation of the contribution of e-learning to the improvement of higher education opportunities for women in Saudi Arabia at De Montfort University.

My research interests are in the field of educational technology concentrating on how e-learning can help women to continue their higher education within their social and religious beliefs in the conservative countries such as Saudi Arabia. I also interest to explore the ability of Saudi women to convert this opportunity offered by e-learning (capability) into a valuable educational achievement (functioning) through the perspective of the capability approach.
