Peter R. Mulvihill is an Associate Professor, Faculty of Environment Studies and Associate Dean, Faculty of Graduate Studies, York University. York is the third largest university in Canada, with 55,000 students and 54 graduate programs.

Peter studied at Carleton University, the University of Waterloo and the University of Montreal. Before joining York University, he was an instructor at Concordia University and the University of Northern British Columbia. His main research interests include environmental assessment, alternative approaches to environmental planning and management, scenario development and Northern Canada.

In his current role as Associate Dean of Graduate Studies, Peter has responsibility for exploring options for the creation of transferable skills development programs at York University. This will be the topic of his conference presentation in Florence.
