Nicole Diamante is a Ph.D. student in the College of Engineering & Applied Sciences at Stony Brook University focusing on technology, policy and innovation.

As an undergraduate at Marist College, she focused on finance in the business school, and found herself being recruited by Cisco Systems.

She entered Cisco's 2-year leadership development program rapidly earning Cisco professional certifications in wireless, security and IP telephony, in addition she managed hundreds of client accounts.

Deploying her background in account management at Cisco along with her exposure to emerging technologies and their impact on how people learn and get work done, she earned an M.S. in Technological Systems Management at Stony Brook.

Nicole blends her research skills and practical, technical know-how to assess the functional simplicity of elegant solutions while also determining the value-add to learning, operations or competitive strategy.
