Stanca Somesfalean is Associate Professor in the Linguistics Department, UQAM, teaching to both undergraduate and graduate levels.

She holds a M.A. and a Ph.D. in Linguistics from Université du Québec à Montréal. Her main area of research is the syntax of natural languages, particularly the syntax of Romance languages. She has contributed to research in psycholinguistics, in addition to pursuing theoretical and applied research in computational linguistics.

She recently co-authored, with Marco Pasteris, a book that examines the current approach to the study activity manifested by students at different levels of education and aims to render it scientific.
