Dr. Chun-Feng Joy Lin graduated with her PhD in therapeutic recreation from University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, in 2003. Her specialties include special education, therapeutic recreation, indigenous education, interpretation education, and physical education.

She is currently an associate professor at the Department of Physical Education in National Pingtung University of Education. She is also the director of Indigenous Research and Education Centre at the University.

In her career as an educator, she had been an elementary school teacher in Taiwan for eight years. She had strong foundation and experiences in teaching and curriculum design. As the director of the Indigenous Research and Education Center at National Pingtung University of Education, she works closely with local indigenous schools. She is currently involved with the Indigenous Science Education Project from the National Science Council of Taiwan; the project aims to incorporate indigenous culture from the Paiwan, Rukai, Bunun, Amis, Dawu tribes into national science education curriculum in order to provide culturally diverse learning opportunities for both indigenous and non-indigenous students.
