Barbara Blum works at Stiftung Digitale Chancen (Digital Opportunities Foundation), a foundation which coordinates Germany- and Europe-wide projects promoting digital inclusion.

She graduated in English Literature, English Linguistics and Communication Studies from Ludwig Maximilians University in Munich in 2010. She also read English and Media Arts at Royal Holloway, University of London, as an exchange student in the Erasmus/Socrates programme.

Apart from her academic qualifications she has completed on-the-job trainings as a radio journalist and a media pedagogue and has gained miscellaneous work experience in the fields of media and education.

Currently she is involved in the coordination of the project “Digital Literacy 2.0”, funded in the Lifelong Learning Programme and carried out by eight organisations in seven European countries. The project’s main objective is to teach web 2.0 skills to socially and educationally disadvantaged adults by qualifying staff in non-formal learning settings (such as libraries, community centres and welfare organisations) throughout Europe as tutors.
