Choon Cheng Ong graduated from Stanford University's Masters in Learning, Design and Technology Program this past summer. Since then she has joined the Ministry of Education, Singapore as an Educational Technology Officer.

Prior to enrolling in Stanford University, she was awarded Bachelors of Arts (Second Upper Honors, English Language) and Masters of Arts (English Language Studies) by the National University of Singapore.

Choon Cheng Ong had extensive experience teaching English Language Arts, English Language and Linguistics, as well as General Paper. She was also the head of English department at River Valley High School, Singapore from 2008 to 2010 where she led the redesign of the English Language Arts curriculum and oversaw the rollout of the revised curriculum. She was also Singapore's pioneer batch of English Language and Linguistics teacher, a subject first introduced into the national curriculum in 2009.

She is currently involved in helping schools in Singapore design research projects funded by the National Research Foundation that would empower them to prototype new teaching approaches by tapping on the affordances of ICT.
