Shona Whyte is a lecturer in English at the University of Nice, France.

She studied translation at Heriot-Watt University in Scotland, and has a PhD in linguistics from Indiana University, Bloomington.

At the University of Nice, Shona Whyte teaches English, translation, and second language acquisition, and trains pre- and in-service primary and secondary school language teachers.

Her research interests include young learners, learning technologies and teacher cognition.

She is working with Euline Cutrim Schmid and Sanderin van Hazebrouck on the European project iTILT (Interactive Technologies in Language Teaching) which is funded by the Lifelong Learning Programme with the aim of promoting effective use of interactive whiteboards in the foreign language classroom.
