Samira Houcine is a full-time lecturer at the Faculty of Letters and Human Sciences and is presently in charge of the university centre dedicated to intensive language courses.

In this position, she has actively contributed to the widespread recognition of the centre by attending international conferences, establishing conventions with foreign institutions and inviting foreign academics. She endeavours to make students and all learners sensitive to the necessity of becoming familiar with foreign languages and cultures in the era of globalization.

She is mainly interested in the teaching/learning of foreign languages notably in Algeria, in a context of social plurilingualism and is currently involved in research on language planning and education.

She has presented papers in several international conferences (Cyprus, England, France, Sweden, Switzerland...) and has published papers in national and international journals.
