Ines E. Veauthier is a university lecturer at the Johannes Gutenberg University of Mainz, School of Translation, Linguistics, and Cultural Studies at the Germersheim campus. The focus of her teaching is on courses and seminars in American literature and culture as well as translation classes and terminology workshops. Ms. Veauthier is also involved in designing and evaluating aptitude tests for students applying for the master's programme in English.

She graduated from the University of Mainz in Germersheim with a degree in Translation Studies, followed by postgraduate studies in andragogy at the University of Philosophy and Theology at Vallendar, Germany, and a scholarship at the Bread Loaf School of English in the United States. She received a Ph.D. in American Studies from the University of Mainz. Ines E. Veauthier has worked extensively as a specialized translator and as a lecturer at institutions of higher education both at home and abroad. Her research interests include American ethnic literature and cultural codes of emotion, intercultural communication and translation, and innovative teaching. She is also involved in an editing project on gender and translation.
