Roya Khoii is assistant professor at Islamic Azad University, North Tehran Branch. She received her PhD in TEFL from Islamic Azad University, Tehran, Higher Education and Research Complex in 1997. She became a faculty member in 1992 and has been teaching various courses in the field of TEFL at BA and MA levels for about 20 years. She has supervised more than 50 MA theses and written and translated more than 35 books and papers. She worked in the Test Construction Centre of the Iranian Measurement Organization for 6 years (1999-2005). She is also the Supervisor of the translation department of Sadra Islamic Philosophy Institute. She has also participated and presented research papers in several national and international conferences. The paper she presented in the Canada International Conference on Education at the University of Guelph in 2012 won the Best Paper Award.

Her last paper titled "The Effect of Adaptive Mentorship on the Development of Writing in a Foreign Language" was published in Adapting Mentorship Across the Professions in Canada in 2011.

She was also the keynote speaker at Canada International Conference in the University of Toronto in 2013. She has been a loyal participant in ICT Conference, and this is third consecutive year that she presents a paper in this Conference. Her major areas of research are foreign language testing and teaching.
