Stellan Sundh is a senior lecturer of the English language at Uppsala University, Campus Gotland.

Stellan Sundh defended his doctoral thesis "Swedish School Leavers' Oral Proficiency in English – Grading of Production and Analysis of Performance" in 2003 at Uppsala University. Since then he has carried out research within the fields of intercultural communication, and the teaching and learning of EFL.

After several years as a language teacher and headmaster at Swedish schools, Stellan now lectures and carries out research in Uppsala and in Visby on the island of Gotland. He is engaged in courses in teacher education, intercultural communication and academic writing in English. He has published teaching material on cross-cultural communication between Sweden and Russia.

His interest in research lies in the use of English as a lingua franca and its implications for the teaching and learning of English at primary and secondary schools.
