Sabrina Campregher is a Ph.D student at the Free University of Bolzano.

She has a degree in Education from the Free University of Bolzano in 2010. Since graduating last July, Sabrina has started her Ph.D studies in “General Pedagogy, Social Pedagogy and General Education”.

Sabrina Campregher is specialized in the use of the IWB (Interactive Whiteboard) and gives training courses to teachers about how they can integrate the use of the IWB into their lessons.

As well, Sabrina undertook a research project which was carried out among Italian teachers. This study investigated the effects of the use of the IWB in the classroom.

Sabrina was asked to participate in the National Convention about Integration and Inclusion which was held in the Free University of Bolzano in November 2010. During this conference Sabrina presented her research about how to use the IWB with differing ability students.

She is the scientific reference for the research “Classroom web 2.0 technology” which is a research project funded by the Trentino province that corresponds with the national study project into the use of Web 2.0 technology in the classroom.
