

Student Teacher Interaction

Afshan Saleem

Bahria University (Pakistan)
afshan.saleem@bimcs.edu.pk

Abstract

Realistically, no teacher will ever meet the needs of everyone all the time. I personally advocate that teachers work within the system to teach in a way that they believe will best serve the “public good.” In other words, teaching should be a decision making process. Teachers must rely on their reason, their experience, and their morals to best meet the needs of society and students. They need to be in tune with how their students are learning and adjusting, while being aware of what the current political-economy wants from its students even if that means dealing with “No Student Left Behind”. They must also be reflective of their effectiveness as a teacher. They should be the “life learners” and study their profession, subject matter, and their students as best they can. To best serve their students and the society, teachers must be as effective as they can be.