Rhoda Weiss-Lambrou is Professor of Occupational Therapy and interim Director of the School of Rehabilitation, Faculty of Medicine, Université de Montréal, Quebec, Canada.

From 2000-2009, she was Director of the university's centre for faculty teaching and learning, le Centre d'études et de formation en enseignement supérieur (CEFES) whose mission is to promote and support the scholarship of teaching and learning. Professor Weiss-Lambrou is associate editor of the online publication, the International Journal of Technology in Higher Education and she has been recognized for her contributions to the use of information and communication technologies in higher education.

Her teaching and research interests center upon the pedagogical integration of new technologies, the use of Web 2.0 tools and the application of mobile technologies in medicine and rehabilitation. She is currently engaged in several projects aimed to encourage faculty and graduate students to creatively explore the potential teaching and learning applications of the iPad and iPhone in medicine and health science education.

Professor Weiss-Lambrou has presented a number of international conferences on the role of mobile learning in higher education as well as on the use of mobile devices for handicapped persons and the elderly.
