Matthew Norsworthy is a Professor at Ashford University out of Los Angeles, California. He teaches composition, literature, and film. Matthew also teaches English and humanities courses as an adjunct instructor at several other colleges and universities.

He has a Masters degree in English, from Fort Hays State University, as well as a Masters of Fine Arts in Creative Writing from National University. His doctorate work is in Higher Education and Organizational Change at Benedictine University.

Matthew Norsworthy also studied British History and British Theater in conjunction with Oxford University and London University in London, England.

Matthew Norsworthy has published poems in literary journals like GNU and The Link. He has also published creative nonfiction for a university website, and wrote a weekly column for a small town newspaper.

Matthew has made several presentations on historical preservation throughout the state of Georgia.

Matthew Norsworthy's research interests are based in the Humanities, focusing on the use of technology and online platforms to offer doctoral degree programs online at colleges and universities.

He has also presented on this topic at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, North Carolina.

There are significantly fewer online graduate degree programs (masters or doctorate level) in humanities fields like literature, writing, history, languages, art history, religion, and philosophy compared to the education and business fields. Matthew Norsworthy is researching the potential for online PhD programs in humanities fields.
